

ABSTRACT

The method of producing a pinion carrier comprised of two cold form cooperating carrier components, each consisting of an aperture relatively flat plate having 5 legs extending transversely from the plate; assembling the components so that the legs of one of the components abutted the legs of the other component, and welding the abutting legs together.